“ Learning about the restoration of old sewing machines is not for the faint of heart. Reading Miller's posts online gave me hope that I could bring some of my beloved iron beauties back into service. I'm so grateful for our conversations online, and am blessed to have found in him someone who loved these old machines as much as I do.

Now, learning more about his life beyond our shared hobby, I understand his passion for sharing his knowledge and skills.

What a wonderful life's legacy he built. He was a man after the Lord's own heart.

“ RIP Miller. You have now ascended to the happy hunting ground for treadlers where rare machines go to make folks like you and Cindy Peters and all the other treadlers up there very happy. I never met you but I wish I had a chance to shake your hand as you contributed so much to our mutual hobby via the Treadle On group on the internet. Rest in Peace old friend.

“ Miller was a treasure to all who "knew" him via the internet and old sewing machines/treadles/etc. online groups. He solved many a problem for those of us who love the fancy and he did so in a most knowledgeable and courteous way. Miller will be greatly missed and never forgotten by those of us he so graciously helped with his deep knowledge of our "fancy". Carol Garnaat (aka Carol in Mid-Mich).

“ What a great man Miller was. I worked with Miller at A.E.D.C.. I worked with him and for him at Microcraft. They say you don't know someone until you work with them .One of the finest and smartest men I have ever known.
A great Christian man ,and a Elder in the Lords Church. Thanks for the great example you set for me.
In Christian love

“ I never met Miller. I have no idea what he looks like. But whenever I saw his name on Treadle On, I would stop and read what he had to say because it was always good advice, well-written and understandable even for a neophyte like me. I will miss him and his knowledge on treadle sewing machines. I extend my condolences to his family and thank them for sharing Miller with me all these years.
Sincerely,

“ So so sorry to hear of Miller's passing. He was a fountain of knowledge on treadle sewing machines, I was blessed to have him as a peer in treadle on (newsgroup dedicated to treadle sewing machines online) to help me on my way with learning all about them when I moved to a New Home Sewing Machine home in the original company town and purchased some machines to decorate the house with & learn how to use them. He didn't know me from Adam, but he was ever so helpful and I am forever appreciative of his knowledge. I looked forward to his postings, even on other treadle machines as they were chock full of information. May he rest in peace, and sympathies to his family in their time of grieving. <3
